Expression of LMP2 is higher in some types of cancer than in normal tissue, and the role of LMP2 expression in breast cancer progression remains unclear. LMP2 mRNA expression in breast cancer tissues and corresponding non-tumorous breast tissues was measured by reverse transcriptase-polymerase chain reaction (RT-PCR). The presence of LMP2 protein in breast cancer tissues was examined by immunohistochemistry. LMP2 expression was evaluated in normal mammary gland and breast cancer tissues, and its relationship to survival was determined. The LMP2 transcript was detected in all breast cancer tissue samples, while only 11 of 22 corresponding non-tumorous breast tissues were positive. LMP2 protein expression was detected in 84.5% (69/82) of breast cancer tissues and in 15.8% (3/19) of non-tumorous breast tissues. LMP2 protein expression was detected more frequently in hormone receptor-positive tumors and in tumors with a lower histologic grade. LMP2 protein expression was detected more frequently in human epidermal growth factor receptor 2 (HER2) -negative tumors. The survival of the high LMP2 expression group was worse than that of the low LMP2 expression group ( $P = 0.03$ ). However, LMP2 expression in non-tumorous breast tissues had no influence on the prognosis of patients. LMP2 mRNA and protein were expressed in breast cancer tissues. LMP2 expression was correlated with hormone receptor status and a lower histologic grade of breast cancer. LMP2 expression in non-tumorous breast tissue had no influence on the survival of patients. These findings suggest that LMP2 expression in breast cancer has a tumorigenic effect, particularly in cases of negative hormone receptor expression and a higher histologic grade.
